

Anticipated Course Schedule

Help

This page gives an anticipated schedule of when material will be available and assignments due. We reserve the right to change these dates (for items still in the future) if the need arises, but we do not expect to do so. Also, in case of discrepancy (unlikely, but mistakes happen), trust the deadlines presented elsewhere on the course web page rather than this page, which is more of a roadmap. (And then tell us about the discrepancy on the discussion forum so we can fix this page.)

The basic idea is that we will release a section of material on Thursday or Friday (depending on your timezone) and have it due on the Monday or Tuesday that is about 11 days later. In that sense, you have two weekends from the time an assignment is provided to when it is due. However, because we release a section of material each week, if you leave Section N until the second weekend, then you will only have one weekend before Section N+1 is due. In other words, the sections overlap by approximately 4 days. See the course grading policy for the difference between a homework "deadline" and "hard deadline" -- or just be sure to finish before the "deadline" so you do not need to worry about it.

While one-new-section-each-week is the general idea, the schedule below is slightly more spread out than that. And, in particular, we moved the deadline for the assignment around American Thanksgiving (as this affects about 30% of the class and the same extra days are provided to all 100% of students).

Finally, the way to read the table is in terms of "days from the start of the course" where the day the course started (Thursday afternoon October 2 in the U.S. Pacific timezone) is day 0. So, for example, day 12 would be either October 14 or October 15 for you, depending on timezone.
